

FDear Michael,

We recently read what is becoming a familiar news story. It was about a large company that had its Form I-9s stolen. Police said it was obviously the work of an identity theft gang. Now, this company has no way to document its compliance with employment verification rules and regulations!

This story clearly illustrates the need for the electronic storage of Form I-9. In addition, new regulations are requiring employers doing business with the federal government to use the new E-Verify system. Many states already require all employers to use E-Verify, and this trend may soon become mandatory nationwide.

To help ease the transition to E-Verify and the electronic storage of Form I-9, please click here to download our whitepaper Best Practices for a Corporate I-9 Program, and take a look at Tracker I-9 – it combines both Form I-9 employment eligibility and immigration case management in one comprehensive software package.
